- 25X1 1. The arrival in Berlin on 17 February 1950 of Jan Izydorczyk, Polish ambassador to Germany, presupposed reorganization of the three Polish agencies working independently in that city: the consulate general, military mission, and trade delegation. Izydorczyk took over the consulate immediately and the following changes were made shortly thereafter:
- 25X1 a. The trade delegation was placed under the Ambassador's direct control and its chief, Stanislaw Broniewicz, acquired the new title of Trade Advisor to the Polish Diplomatic Representation in Berlin.
- b. A. Hruszowski, assistant to Broniewicz, became Trade Attaché.
- c. The trade delegation became the Bureau of the Trade Advisor with the Polish Diplomatic Representation in Berlin.
- d. It is expected that the finance, service and administration units of the trade delegation will be unified in the Bureau of the Trade Advisor. All personnel may be required to live in a single compound.
3. The status of the Polish military mission does not yet appear to have been clarified. It is accredited to all four occupation powers and its head, Brigadier General Jakob Prawin, was the chief of all Polish missions in East and West Germany prior to Izydorczyk's appointment. At present the military mission, functioning independently, exists side by side with the ambassadorial offices. It is reported, however, that Izydorczyk has taken the first steps towards transferring various military mission units to the consulate.
4. As of 1 June 1950, all members of the Polish military mission still residing in Western Germany were to be dismissed. It is alleged that General Prawin may be recalled to Poland during July 1950. At that time complete reorganization of all Polish bureaus in Berlin is expected to take place.
- 25X1 Comment: The final reorganization probably will allow the Polish military mission an outward semblance of autonomy to preserve its accreditation to all occupation powers, thus facilitating its operation through the military attaché.
